

Fisher Library of rare books is dedicated

For President John Evans it was "a special occasion for the University of Toronto, a special occasion for the Province of Ontario, an important occasion for Canada". For Dr. Sidney Fisher it was an event that would lead in time to making the University of Toronto the outstanding centre for the study of Shakespeare.

The occasion of which Dr. Evans and Dr. Fisher spoke was the dedication on April 13 of the Thomas Fisher Rare Book Library and the official opening of an exhibit from the Fisher Collection formed by Sidney Fisher and his brother Charles. The collection, chiefly Shakespeareana, has been placed on loan to the University Library from the Ontario Heritage Foundation, an Ontario Government agency which is the official recipient of gifts of a cultural and historical nature to the Province.

About 200 guests attended the ceremony in the new building, which is part of the John P. Roberts Library complex in the block bounded by St. George St., Harbord St., Huron St. and Sussex Ave. Provost George Ignatieff of Trinity College gave the prayer of dedication. Then Thomas Somerville, president of E. C. M. Cape & Co. Ltd., which, with Robertson-Yates Corp. Ltd., in a consortium called Cape-Rycro, was the principal contractor, handed to President Evans a key signifying the turning over of the building to the users. Dr. Evans presented the key to Chief Librarian Robert H. Blackburn, who in turn gave it to Miss Marion Brown, head of the Department of Rare Books and Special Collections, whose headquarters is now in the Thomas Fisher Rare Book Library.

In his opening remarks, the President expressed the gratitude of the University for the generosity of Sidney and Charles Fisher in placing their remarkable collection in the University of Toronto through the Ontario Heritage Foundation. Dr. Evans told the audience that Sidney Fisher's father had given him a son volume of Shakespeare which the elder Fisher had won as a school prize. That gift had sparked an interest in Shakespeare in the mind of the boy which had resulted in the gathering by him and his brothers of one of the greatest private collections of works by and about Shakespeare and his times.

The new building, Dr. Evans said, offered a unique resource for research in the humanities, and in the sciences as well. He paid tribute to his predecessor in the Presidential office, Dr. Claude Bissell, for his concept of the library and to Dr. Blackburn, Miss Brown, and Dr. Ernest Rulif, President of the University of Manitoba, who was Dean of Graduate Studies in U of T at the time of planning, for their help in bringing the concept to fruition.

As he declared the exhibit from the Fisher Collection officially open, Dr. Fisher said the pain of parting with the books and prints had turned to joy because of the excellent care which he knew the collection would receive in its new home. The First Folio of Shakespeare, printed in 1623 which was in the collection, was one of the world's great

Brian Holmes appointed Dean of Medicine

Dr. R. Brian Holmes, Associate Dean of Medicine, Clinical Affairs, is to succeed Dr. A. L. Chute as Dean of the Faculty of Medicine. His nomination, put forward by President John Evans, to the Academic Affairs Committee of the Governing Council last week, was approved by Council on Wednesday.

The appointment is effective July 1. Dr. Holmes has been Associate Dean since Feb. 1 last year, and is also professor and chairman of the Faculty's Department of Radiology. He is on leave of absence from his post as radiologist-in-chief of Toronto General Hospital. Dr. Chute has been Dean since July 1, 1966.

Richard Brian Holmes was born in London, Ont., on Dec. 11, 1919, the son of a family that came to Canada from Ireland in 1832 and has since produced at least a dozen physicians. With a father and an uncle in medicine, no one was surprised when Brian enrolled in the medical school of the University of Western Ontario. He gained his M.D. in 1943 and, after serving a junior rotating internship in Victoria Hospital, London, took the Armed Forces Radiology Course at Toronto General Hospital and joined the R.C.A.M.C.

In 1946, Dr. Holmes became a Fellow in Pathology at UW and, the following year, joined the postgraduate program in radiology of the Massachusetts General Hospital. He gained his M.Sc. from UW in 1949 and, one year later, joined the Faculty of Medicine of the U of T and the Department of Radiology of the TGH. In 1965, he was

Plan September opening for a new day care centre

Day care was a topic of considerable interest to the Governing Council at its meeting last Wednesday at Scarborough College.

Vice-President Jill Conway reported on the survey of prospective need for day care facilities by members of the University, which had established that interest in such facilities exists among students and members of the teaching and non-academic staff.

This is being followed up by an analysis of the campus day care needs in depth, including a further survey from which the criteria for assessing applications and the method of operation will be determined. It is hoped that the analysis of the results of this survey will be completed by the first of June. In addition, the Advisory Committee on Programs has surveyed day care centres at other Canadian universities and has found wide variations in scope and practice: University of British Columbia operates six such centres and the University of Western Ontario has three, but more commonly there is only one. Some kind of start-up grant from the university has been essential, and in addition many universities provide rent-free accommodation and/or utilities and maintenance.

The Committee has made a submission to the Metro Department of Social Services so that the day care centre, when opened, would qualify for municipal subsidy in respect of parents whose situation makes them eligible for such support. In regard to the recruitment of staff, contact has been made with the Department of Early Childhood Education at Seneca College, whose graduates are regarded by the Metro officials as particularly well trained. It is likely that a director would need to begin work in August, looking to an opening of the Centre in September.

Prof. Conway was asked whether the fact that only 34 of the enquirers were parents of children of suitable age was sufficient indication of interest to justify proceeding with the Centre. She replied that it has been the experience elsewhere that the level of interest mounts rapidly as soon as specific facts are known about the costs and the type of personnel involved.

Prof. Conway was questioned about the occupants of the Devonshire Place building, exploring the possibility of some arrangement with In-Res Co-op, which has a scheme for a mixed student-community development in the northwest campus area. She replied that discussions are going on with both St. Thomas's Church and In-Res Co-op, but that no agreement could be made with the latter until their scheme has been approved.

The In-Res Co-op scheme had been discussed briefly at an earlier stage of the Governing Council meeting, when Prof. Charles Hanly reported the Planning and Resourcing Committee's endorsement of the type and nature of the proposal and its recommendation that the University arrange for its financing. The Executive Committee had asked for further information on certain aspects of the use of the land including the proposed percentage of non-university residents.

Two day symposium marks School of Hygiene anniversaries

The School of Hygiene celebrated the 60th anniversary of its diploma program in Public Health and the 25th anniversary of its diploma program in Hospital Administration with a two-day symposium and a dinner in Hart House.

An audience of around 200 from various public health disciplines heard the Federal Health and Welfare Minister, the Hon. Marc Lalonde, explain the changing philosophies of his government, with their increasing emphasis on prevention of disease and the maintenance of good health by recreation. Dr. Vernon Wilson, immediate past head of the Health Services and Mental Health Administration, U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare, spoke of trends and issues in the U.S.A.

and Dr. A. Horowitz, director of the Pan American Health Organization, broadened the American picture to include the problems of Latin America. Sir John Brotherton, chief medical officer of the Scottish Home and Health Department, explained new concepts of community care in Britain.

As School of Hygiene director, Dr. Bernard Buvette pointed out, all helped to provide a fine sense of perspective for the second day's discussion of Canadian problems. For Torontonians, the most interesting aspect of this intellectual fare was clear evidence in one presentation after another of the impact on the international health picture of philosophies which had their origins within U of T's School of Hygiene.

Varsity Fund telethon needs faculty support

From Tuesday, April 24, to Thursday, May 17 (three nights a week this week and four thereafter) volunteers will be telephoning alumni in the annual telethon on behalf of the Varsity Fund, which provides financial support for University needs which cannot be met from the normal operating budget.

All members of the University staff - academic and support - will be warmly welcomed if they are willing to give an evening or two towards this work. Wine, cheese and sandwiches will be served from 5 p.m.

Please telephone 2171 for more information - date, time, etc.

APRIL 26 DEADLINE

table, rather than approve, the part of the recommendation dealing with financing until the additional information had been obtained, since he was opposed to allowing any non-university people in the housing scheme.

President John Evans pointed out that, if the administration were not authorized to proceed to look into possible schemes of financing, the time schedule for the entire Innis College development would be jeopardized. He said it must be recognized that a mixed development of members of the community and members of the University is integral to the philosophy of the Innis proposal, if it is assumed in Mr. Herman's remarks that this possibility is excluded, then this rules out the Innis proposal altogether; but if Mr. Herman would like to have more evidence presented to the Governing Council, which it could then consider in its debate and decision, that is absolutely correct, Mr. Herman agreed that the latter was his meaning.

Dean Robert Greene and Prof. Duff, chairman of Mathematics, addressed the Council on the aftermath of the Mathematics sit-in. Dean Greene said that Mathematics had suffered an extraordinary inflation of their lower-year courses because of students who took them in the hope of getting into Medicine. He also pointed out that the Faculty of Arts and Science had had its budget reduced from the amount requested for the past four years, with adverse effects on all departments. Prof. Duff said that the staff-student ratio in Mathematics was 1:27, and the average size of undergraduate classes was 80. The very large enrolment in the elementary courses of the first and second year takes up 35 per cent of the department's workload. Advanced courses, which have achieved some reputation, account for 20 per cent; graduate work, 18 per cent; committee work, 7 per cent, leaving 30 per cent for study, research, writing, and other activities. The Department has established a committee under the chairmanship of Prof. Rooney which is examining its own internal structure and governance. An "assembly" of instructors, tutors, etc., has had a series of meetings, and has adjusted the marking scheme using a "Coxeter formula" which has the pedagogically acceptable merit of containing an element of a second chance. He mentioned that one of the students who addressed the Governing Council at its last meeting, Robert Anderson, was a member of the successful University of Toronto team that received favourable mention in the recent Putnam competition - the only Canadian team so honoured.

A recommendation from the Academic Affairs committee for a sub-committee on Academic Appeals was questioned by Brian Morgan and Joyce Denyer on the grounds that the students, particularly in particular, were insufficiently represented, but their proposed amendment was defeated.

The proposed Code of Behaviour is in process of revision by task forces of Academic Affairs and Internal Affairs and will be brought forward to the May meeting of the Governing Council. The structure will probably come to the June meeting.

The next meeting of the Governing Council will be held at 4 p.m. on May 17, probably in the refurbished Council Chamber in Simcoe Hall.

Classics become 'Intercollegiate'

The Intercollegiate Department of Classics was established on July 1, 1972, by Dean A. D. Allen, as the result of the report of a committee appointed and chaired by him during the preceding academic year. The committee included the heads of University College and of the three federated colleges, the chairman of the Combined Departments of Classics and of each of the College Department of Classics, the chairman of the Graduate Department of Classics and representative deans from the School of Graduate Studies and from Scarborough and Erindale Colleges.

Among the major administrative changes in the new structure, as compared with the Combined Departments of Classics which it replaces, are the creation of the new office of Intercollegiate Chairman, and of a new Committee of Chairmen (consisting of the four College chairmen of Classics, the chairman of the Graduate Department of Classics and the Intercollegiate Chairman).

This Committee of Chairmen will be responsible for recommending all new appointments in the Department. It will also be responsible for the scheduling and teaching arrangements of all courses offered by the Department.

The duties of the Intercollegiate Chairman (a portion of whose salary is to be paid by the University) include the convening and chairing of meetings of the Department and of the Committee of Chairmen and representation of the Department on appropriate University bodies.

Other features indicative of the closer cooperation between the college departments which this new organization implies include the pooling of information on summer research appointments, prospective leaves of absence and visiting professorships, and the general agreement that conditions governing promotion and tenure in the Department of Classics should so far as possible be the same as those currently applied in the other departments of the Faculty of Arts and Science.

Prof. D. J. Conacher was appointed Chairman of the new Intercollegiate Department, for a three-year term of office, on July 1, 1972.

treasures, he said. Dr. Fisher drew attention to the display of etchings by Wenceslaus Hollar of scenes of Shakespeare's London. There had not been a catalogue of these drawings since the 18th century. Now Richard Pennington of McGill University was depositing in the Thomas Fisher Rare Book Library a new catalogue which will be published in book form by the University of Toronto Press.

The new rare book library building is named for Thomas Fisher, great-grandfather of Sidney and Charles. Originally of Leeds, Yorkshire, Thomas Fisher settled in 1822 in Upper Canada at the King's Mill on the Humber River in what is now the Borough of Etobicoke. He sold the mill in 1835 and built a new mill, store, and cottages for his labourers farther north on the Humber. A public-spirited and educated man, Fisher was a justice of the peace, coroner, and an officer in the West York militia in the Rebellion of 1837.

The Fisher treasures include possibly the most important Shakespeare collection in private hands, including all four folios of 1623, 1632, 1664 and 1685 and most of the important collected editions since that time; a good representation of books which Shakespeare knew or used as sources; a collection of the etchings of Wenceslaus Hollar (1607-1677) — some 6600 prints from about 2,500 plates providing a pictorial representation of the London of Shakespeare's time — the only considerable collection of the artist's work in North America and second only to those at Windsor Castle and the British Museum. The collections also include the writings of three modern authors — Rudyard Kipling, Lord Dunsany, and Norman Douglas.

Since 1955, when the Department of Rare Books and Special Collections was established as a separate department of the University of Toronto Library, its collections have grown extensively and rapidly to more than 75,000 volumes covering almost every field of knowledge. The Thomas Fisher Library building makes possible further expansion to a maximum capacity of between 20,000 and 250,000 volumes.

Both the sciences and humanities are well represented and include early printed books and significant collections of modern authors. Among the special strengths are the holdings in Italian literature (especially drama), Anglo-Irish literature, and the history of science. There are good collections of the works of writers as diverse as Thomas Hobbes, Robert Boyle, John Locke, Jean Jacques Rousseau and Charles Darwin.

The manuscript collections range in time and subject from the 11th or 12th century Greek Gospels to the papers of such contemporary Canadian poets as Leonard Cohen and Margaret Atwood, from the manuscript of David Thompson's Narrative of his explorations in western North America between 1784 and 1812, to a corrected typescript of D. H. Lawrence's Women in Love. A number of collections of Canadian manuscript papers complement holdings of personal papers in the University Archives, housed on the top two floors of the new building. The Archives contain non-current University records, publications of the University and its student organizations, copies of these accepted for graduate degrees, and papers of the Presidents of the University and other administrative officers.

The holdings of the Department of Rare Books and Special Collections are on two basement levels, five galleries around the high-ceilinged reading rooms, and on one and a half floors above these reading rooms. In addition to three reading rooms, with accommodation for a total of 75 persons, there are six closed study carrels and two seminar rooms where students needing to use material in the collections may meet. Work space is provided for a staff of about 30 and a book binding-repair laboratory. All material in the Rare Book Library is available for study by anyone who has a genuine research interest.

named chairman of the University's Department of Radiology and radiologist-in-chief of the hospital.

Some 16 contributions of Dr. Holmes to medical literature range over many subjects, from clinical conditions, as seen by the X-ray camera, to exploratory work in cine-radiology and the use of image intensifiers and other sophisticated electronic devices to improve picture quality. He was directly instrumental in the establishment at the U of T of a radiological research laboratory under Dr. Eric Milne, that is without parallel in Canada and one of few such institutions in the world.

In 1971, Dr. Holmes was University representative on the Management Committee of the Minister of Health's Role Study of the U of T Health Science Complex. He was representative of the departmental chairmen on the executive committee of the Independent Planning Committee, charged with the coordination of all University Hospital capital construction programs, and is faculty representative on the Council of Ontario Faculties of Medicine. At the TGH, his activities included the organization of two "think-ins" and chairmanship of the resulting TGH Development Committee, involving trustees, administration and medical staff.

Dr. Holmes sees several important issues facing the Faculty of Medicine on which decisions will soon have to be made. One of these is the tremendous pressure of students wanting to enter medicine, to the extent where there are three or four times as many qualified candidates as there are places for them in the school. "I think," he says, "that the Faculty is going to have to decide whether it can increase its intakes and still maintain the quality of its educational programs." Another, interrelated, problem is that of physicians coming to Canada from outside jurisdictions, aggravating shortages in their countries of origin and indirectly leading eventually to a situation of over-production here. In another area, the increasing tendency of Canadian medical graduates to go into specialization, Dr. Holmes sees hope. "I have the feeling," he says, "that this situation is changing and that we have some pretty gifted students interested in more social aspects of medicine and in family and community practice".

R. A. Gordon, Professor and Chairman of the Department of Anaesthesia, Faculty of Medicine, U of T, and Anaesthetist-in-Chief, Toronto General Hospital, was recently honoured when the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons of England elected him as an Honorary Fellow of the Faculty of Anaesthetists in recognition of his contributions to his specialty. Dr. Gordon was presented for the award of the Fellowship in London on March 21, on the occasion of the celebration of the 25th Anniversary of the founding of the Faculty of Anaesthetists. The number of Honorary Fellows of this Faculty is limited to twenty, of which there are currently sixteen elected.

Killam Awards

The Killam Awards are administered by the Canada Council and are awarded to senior scholars for periods of one year (or a longer period if the research requires it). There is provision for the stipend of the principal researcher up to the full amount of current salary. Deadline for applications for the 1974-75 academic year is Oct. 1, 1973.

On Tuesday and Wednesday, April 24 and 25, Mrs. Erika v. Conta Bruce, head of the Killam Program, will visit the U of T to meet those who wish to have information about these awards. At 10 a.m. on Tuesday, April 24, she will meet interested students nearing the end of their Ph.D. work. She will also discuss the program at 3 p.m. each day in the Debates Room of Hart House and will be available for appointments at other times during the two days. Chairmen of Graduate Departments will be available to arrange such appointments by calling Miss Grace Vallis at 928-2380.
